

My name is Kyle and my son is Alexander, he currently lives in upstate NY. Alex is living in a group home and I am fighting to have him reside with me in Florida. Alex has been diagnosed MR, he is a great kid and very special to me. I had a trial recently and lost because of the lack of knowledge of his condition. Alex is very tall for his age (7) and loves to play sports and he loves spider man and batman. If you were to see Alex you would never know he had a disability, he looks and plays just like any other little boy.

Once I receive all the knowledge that I need I will be fighting again to get my son. I have learned by my first failure it is not enough to be a caring, loving, and concerned father. Love is no longer strong enough especially when your child has a disability. Again I am grateful for dadvocates and look forward in participating in trainings and workshops; maybe I will be a presenter. I was happy to have talked to Mr. Hawke and look forward to attending some of the Dadvocates meeting.
